Connecticut Sports Law Celebrates Second Anniversary

MONDAY March 15, 2010: Connecticut Sports Law (<http://ctsportslaw.com>) is pleased to mark its second anniversary covering the intersection of sports and the law in Connecticut and beyond.

Connecticut Sports Law is published by Daniel B. Fitzgerald, an attorney at Updike, Kelly & Spellacy, P.C. in New Haven and adjunct Professor of Sports Law at Quinnipiac University School of Law. The website covers a variety of issues relating to sports law and business. For example, Connecticut Sports Law has examined the National Letter of Intent Program in "Signing Day Brings National Letter of Intent \(NLI\) into Focus" and a suit in which a local high school coach successfully sued the parent of one of her athletes for libel, in Friday Night Rights: Connecticut Coach Awarded \$88k in Libel Lawsuit Against Parent.

"Connecticut Sports Law continues to offer a unique perspective in the field of sports law that is otherwise not covered" said Robert J. Romano, a Connecticut Attorney and President of the Romano Sports Agency. "From high school to college athletics to the pros, the blog continually offers content that is both practical and compelling."

During the past year, Connecticut Sports Law added Connecticut Attorney Daniel R. Canavan as a Featured Columnist. Canavan provided in-depth coverage of various legal and business issues involving the National Hockey League, including an exclusive interview with Howard Baldwin, former owner of the Hartford Whalers, and the effect of the Phoenix Coyotes on Connecticut's NHL hopes. In addition, Canavan and Fitzgerald worked together to provide the leading coverage and analysis of the United Football League's foray into Hartford.

During its second year, Connecticut Sports Law was listed as one of the Top 50 Blogs for Sports Agents & Managers by First and Goal, and published articles in Legal Issues in High School Athletics and Sports Litigation Alert, leading publications in the Sports Law field.
